A Day in the Life of a Northrop Grumman Intern

Stand Alone Work

Building an adaptive requirements comparison database (MS Excel & MS Access); working with technical documents; investigating emerging technologies; researching potential solutions.

Team Based Project Work

Designing new tools to aid in the defense and hardening of cyber networks; actively participating in the testing of various vendor products; working as an equal contributor, side by side, with experienced professionals to develop solutions in today's cyber challenges.

Developing Personal Skills

Giving presentations to senior leadership on many different topics related to both team and stand alone work; adapting to different work related tasks; communicating with team members and management.

"As an intern at Northrop Grumman, not only will you improve your professional business skills and build your network, but you will work on real projects that aid in the efforts of the war fighter. This will help you understand the nation's position on the world stage and the vital role that cybersecurity plays in so many aspects of modern life. You will see first-hand how your academic classes were related to one another and how that knowledge is applicable to positions in the work-force."

-Alfred Gonzalez (Cyber Architect)

Northrop Grumman's Leadership in Cybersecurity
